Yes, you can. The leverage applied to your account is set according to your request and confirmed through the Client Portal during the account opening process. Marginal trading is based on the leverage applied to your account, and while higher leverage increases the possibility of a profitable return, it also significantly increases risk.

At WM Markets, leverage may vary depending on the instruments you trade. WM Markets applies Dynamic Leverage, which is a risk-management tool designed to minimize risks from high-volume trading. With Dynamic Leverage, leverage is set per instrument by tiers rather than per account. Margin requirements are determined per symbol and automatically adjust when the net number of lots on open positions increases or decreases. This adjustment is applied individually to each trading instrument.

For full details, please refer to the Trading Conditions under the Legal Documents section in your Client Portal and the Dynamic Leverage page on our website.
